COUPLE

The major part of my works, past and present, are editorial illustrations made for newspapers and magazines.

Possibly this alone explains why the group of works I prepared for The Complex Gallery in Smithfield, Dublin, is also so rich in narrative.

Despite this presence my intention is to leave interpretation entirely to those looking at the works.

The colourful couples in the drawings are both close and distant: they are attracted to each other but each shares feelings of uncertainty for the other.

Their reality can appear amusing but nonetheless is also tormented.

And there are times when I just like to consider these works as clear images with unclear meanings, and probably just as images without meanings at all.
